JERUSALEM — Prime Minister

Mr. Shultz met with Mr. Begin for 90 minutes. Mr. Porat said, and gave Mr. Begin a letter from Presi-dent Ronald Reagan at the end of their first meeting.

The spokesman said that Mr. Begin told Mr. Shultz, "We don't intend to stay in Lebanon any longer than we have to." According to Mr. Porat, the prime minister said the most important objective was "10 guarantee Israel's vital security in-

Syria said Wednesday that its forces opened fire for a second straight day to prevent Israel from setting up new fortifications at a huffer zone on the cease-fire line in the Bekaa Valley, The Associated Press reported from Damascus.

A communique from the Syrian command accused the Israeli Defense Forces of provoking the latest episode by sending two hulldozers, escorted by two armored personnel carriers, into the buffer zone on the western edge of the broad vailey. # Reagan Urges Firm Response On 'Threat' in Latin America

By Lou Cannon and Patrick E. Tyler

WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan, in a preview of his evening address to Congress on Central America, warned Wednesday against "the fire that is burning in our own front yard."

We are not accustomed to worrying about a military threat in our rying about a minuary threat in our own hemisphere." Mr. Reagan told the American Newspaper Publish-ers Association. He called for a firm, united response adding, "We have it in our power to act now, to keep the situation manageable, and it is in that spirit that I shall speak to Congress and the nation to-

When be makes the speech, Mr. Reagan will be embarking on a campaign of persuasion that his advisers say has high risks but also provides the hope of salvaging a policy that deeply disturbs an in-creasing number of Americans.

"He's giving the speech," said a White House official Tuesday, "because he thinks the fate of American policy in the region hangs in end in victory."

Administration officials aeknowledge that voter sentiment runs strongly against increased U.S. involvement in Central America. At stake is Mr. Reagan's ability to muster bipartisan support for his policies regarding some of the closest and poorest U.S. neighbors. The threat of escalating regional violence and uncontrolled covert intelligence operations has prompted key congressional committees, with broad support in both houses, to challenge his basic Central America.

Skepticism about involvement in El Salvador and Nicaragua is high-er than on most other national security issues. Administration officials cited public opinion polls, which they said Tuesday were similar to the findings of private surveys, indicating lack of support for Mr. Reagan's policies.

The most recent one, reported April 12 in the Los Angeles Times. found that only 26 percent of Americans believe the U.S. role in El Salvador is "morally justified" compared to 49 percent who believe it is not. # France to Boycott U.S.-Sponsored Sessions on Summit

By Axel Krause International Herald Tribune

PARIS - The French government has decided to boycott a U.S.-sponsored dinner in Paris and a follow-up meeting being organized by Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan, asserting that the Reagan administration was deliberately hypassing existing international organizations to prepare the summit meeting of industrialized nations in Virginia next month.

Authoritative French government sources said Wednesday that President François Mitterrand had personally approved the decision.

The dinner is to be held at a resturant in Paris on May 10 and is U.S. Eases Stand on Gas Supplies taurant in Paris on May 10 and is to be followed by a working session the next day of the seven nations planning to attend the summit conference in Williamshurg. #### Nkomo Aides Cleared but Detained HARARE, Zimbabwe (UPI) - Six officials in Joshua Nkomo's Zimbabwe African People's Union were acquitted Wednesday of stockpiling arms, their lawyers said, but they were kept in detention.

United States in turn canceled the visit.

After being cleared by the High Court, all six were immediately handed 30-day detention orders under emergency regulations allowing the police to arrest anyone thought to be a threat to public safety or order. the lawyers said. The detention orders could be renewed after 30 days.

The acquittals by the High Court dealt a blow to allegations by Prime Minister Robert Mugabe that Mr. Nkomo and his party planned to overthrow the three-year-old Socialist government. The six included two of Mr. Nkomo's former guerrilla commanders. Dumiso Dabengwa and Lookout Masuku. NEW YORK (AP) — Time magazine says it negotiated to buy the rights to the purported diaries of Adolf Hitler from Stern, the West German news magazine, but the deal collapsed when the two sides could not agree on a price.

"We never came close to an agreement on the price," said Brian Brown, publicity manager for Time. "We were unable to resolve the differences between Time's and Stern's closing deadlines, and because of our inability to do that, we would have been unable to ensure that some other publication did not steal the property. And there was insufficient time for us to conduct our own investigation into the legitimacy of the

Thyssen Information

In fiscal 1981/82, the Thyssen Group's course of business was characterized by contrasts. In the Federal Republic of Germany, higher steel prices and a positive development at Thyssen Industrie led to a definite improvement in the results. Our foreign subsidiaries, however, suffered major losses, in particular because of the further aggravated US automobile crisis. Nevertheless, Thyssen's worldwide business situation in 1981/82 was much better than last year although the overall result was not satisfactory.

Thyssen AG's net earnings – after release of Group reserves - totalled DM 52 million. On April 8, 1983, the stockholders' meeting decided to use this amount for a cash dividend of DM 2.00 per nominal DM 50.00 share. In addition, foreign stockholders will be reimbursed DM 0.23 per share by Bundesamt für Finanzen.

The new fiscal year of 1982/83 started under unfavourable economic conditions. The further sharp decline of the world economy and parity changes within the European Community had a highly unfavourable effect on the steel market. Our steel and specialty steel divisions were considerably affected. During the first 6 months of 1982/83, sales of the steel division were down 23% from last year. This is primarily due to a substantial decrease in tonnages shipped which, however, have somewhat recovered in the meantime. Steel revenues per ton, too, after their decline during the first 6 months of 1982/83, are now experiencing a stabilization. In the specialty steel division tonnages sold and revenues per ton obtained so far were not satisfactory, either. Our specialty steel sales dropped by 17% during the first 6 months of 1982/83.

In the capital goods and manufactured products division, during 1982/83, Thyssen Industrie successfully maintained its position in spite of the largely prevailing recession. Notwithstanding the general decline in demand, several major orders were booked in such fields as mechanical engineering, specialty shipbuilding. and transportation equipment. Sales fell by 4% during the first 6 months. For 1982/83, we are anticipating a positive contribution to the overall result. The situation continues to be unfavourable for Budd. In the new fiscal year, the US demand for passenger cars has improved slightly. but supplies of parts to the truck industry invariably remain weak. Great efforts are also required in Budd's railroad business in order to overcome the difficulties which had arisen in 1981/82.

At Thyssen Handelsunion, sales declined by 5% during the first 6 months of fiscal 1982/83. In the meantime, however, a slight recovery in demand has been noted in most of the trading branches. For 1982/83, we are again anticipating a positive contribution of our trading division to the overall result.

All in all, Thyssen's worldwide external sales for fiscal 1982/83 have so far averaged DM 2.3 billion per month, i.e. down 9% from last year,

Democrate Democrate for Pudgets U.S. Military Budgets

By Jack Nelson

Los Angeles Times Service
WASHINGTON — Democratic raders are predicting that Conwill increase the rate of rowth in military spending during he next five years by no more than self as much as President Ronald Reagan is seeking.

They say Congress will cut his two-year, $1.8-trillion proposal by at least $200 billion, cutting the pending increase be seeks from 10 percent adjusted for inflation to no note than 5 percent.

Republican leaders agree that Mr. Reagan will get far less than he sought, although the leader of the Senate's Republican majority, Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee, says he believes the president will get "better than 5 percent" when the proposal is finally approved.

The Senate minority leader, Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, and the Democratic chairman of the House Budget Committee, James R. Jones of Oklahoma, said there was a strong consensus in Congress in favor of holding the increase to 5 percent or less.

Mr. Jones said Tuesday that high-ranking Department of De-fense officials have told him that the department could "live with" an increase of as little as 4 percent that level of funding during the five-year period.

The officials who talked with him do not represent the private feelings of Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, who has insisted on keeping to the 10-percent proposal, Mr. Jones said. But, he added, they are fairly close to

Mr. Jones declined to identify them, explaining that "these were private asides." He added that the condition of such a level of spending is that "they have some as-surances that they can plan on that level of growth over the next five years of the budget cycle."

Police Suspect Blood Feud in Reservation Violence

LOS ANGELES — For the last year, Fidelia Salgado has not

A barrage of gunshots was unloosed on fire fighters who tried to put out the flames. Two bullets shattered window glass and burrowed into a door panel just inches from the

The Mideast Shuttle

By offering to shuttle around the Middle East until everyone agrees to withdraw from Lebanon, Secretary of State George Shultz may have condemned himself to do his Christmas shopping in the souks of Jerusalem. If Mrs. Shultz doesn't mind an excess of copper trinkets, the time may be well-spent.

The prospects for a Lebanon agreement bardly justify such a rash promise. The Israeli people, to be sure, seem to be tiring of keeping their sons on guard duty against no significant danger. But the Israeli government wants more than a military disengagement; it could have had that after one swift week of battle last June. ft also wants political agreements that would justify the costly summerlong war.

As for the Lebanese, they seem far from unanimous about wanting the Israelis out. And those who do may not be willing to pay ine price — a simultaneous Syrian departure. One reason for nonetheless committing Mr.

Shultz's prestige to this negotiation is to establisb clear blame for any impasse. The United States has been condemned in Arah capitals for not forcing the Israelis out and for thus undermining its own plan for negotiations between fsrael and Jordan. At the least, the Shultz shuttle can expose the real obstacles: Lebanon's frailty. Saudi Arahia's unhelpfulness and Syria's evident determination to stay in Lebanon even if Israel agrees to leave.

If Mr. Shultz cannot overcome these obstacles, Lebanon will lose its last chance for independence, fsrael's army would then retreat only part of the way, keeping command of the south and leaving Syria in command of the north. It will be worth a lot to American diplomacy not to be saddled with responsibility for any such dismemberment.

The secretary may also be driven by the failure of the Reagan plan. The moment King Hussein slammed the door on negoriations with Israel, President Ronald Reagan and Mr. Shultz were widely condemned for not having pushed the plan hard enough. But the fact is they put the full weight of American diplomacy behind an eventual partition of the West Bank, which the present Israeli government is sworn to prevent. And the Arabs' answer was to refuse negotiations even on that basis.

The political imperatives in Jordan and Saudi Arabia may require such timidity and deference even to a weak Palestine Liberation Organization. But after all the extraordinary U.S. support those countries have received. Mr. Shultz now has a right to insist that the history of the Reagan plan not be miswritten.

There is also some other urgent business for him in Israel. Its leading figures deserve to bear firsthand the American view that the recent Arab failures do not by any means confirm the wisdom or success of Israeli policies.

The Palestinian problem that led to the devastation of Lehanon and the occupation of the West Bank will not grow easier with time. Israel remains haunted by the Palestinians' human and national yearning, fts security will never be assured if that yearning continues to be denied and ignored.

Destroying the Monster

Not since the German army retreated on the Stalingrad front has there been such a disorderly rout: The Hitler's diary forces seem to be in panicky flight, And, as is generally the case in these affairs, it also seems to be every man for himself. We do not defend, but we do remark, one apparently widespread emotion on the part of the world's onlookers; amusement, bordering on glee at seeing so many ex-perts and scholars and out-on-a-limb investors in and purveyors of the documents caught in what may be a gigantic hoax. The Germans have a word for it: Schadenfreude, meaning joy at another's misfortune. The sight of conounded, humiliated experts seems to afford deen satisfaction to the common man.

But even if droves of onlookers are hoping for the worst, there is, we suspect also a profound curiosity about what could be in such a document as a handwritten diary kept by Adolf Hitler. So there is a simultaneous bope that such a document will be found and authenticated.

This is not because Hitler stands to be "rehabilitated" in the light of some new knowledge or otherwise made the beneficiary of some "revisionist" interpretation of the Nazi chronicle. Rather it is because there is an overwhelming urge in the rest of us to deride, reduce, unmask and finally ritually destroy this monster by catching him at being no more than a base, gross, greedy little man - as distinct from the huge historical force he aspired to be. From Charlie Chaplin ("The Great Dictator") to Mel Brooks ("Springtime for Hitler" with a stop in between for Spike Jones ("Der Führer's Face"), comic artists have offered us this reading and consolation.

With or without the currently contested diaries, the public has already been treated to a certain amount of household Hitleriana and to the insights of his political and intellectual valets. The books of the late Albert Speer in particular give us a look at the mealtime, social, after-dinner, at-the-movies (yes) Hitler. And this is read to satisfy something in addition to the instinct for destruction by derision. One reads these details in Speer, as one reads Milovan Djilas's "Conversations With Stalin," trying to identify and understand the buman component in figures who were sources of such vast suffering, to which they evidently were indifferent (at best), figures whose brutality seemed to exist on such an unfamiliar, unimaginable, inhuman scale.

But in truth, the details of the tyrants' jokes and insecurities and mundane living habits do not help. They do not humanize. They do not explain. The unanswerable question remains. Hitler's diary, if real, would no doubt be a boon to historical studies and it would tell us much. But it still would not tell us what we most would like to know: how a human being could have descended to what he was. In that sense, no matter who does or does not authenticate which documents, humankind will have to go on imagining Hitler.

Trade and Security

American trade policy is in a state of more than normal intellectual confusion. The Reagan administration has become increasingly divided between the free traders and an internal opposition that is chiefly concerned by foreign - that is, Japanese - inroads on the American high-technology industries. This debate has been going on all winter through a series of White House meetings over the Houdaille case.

Houdaille Industries is a Florida manufacturer of computer-driven machine tools: it wants protection from its Japanese competi tors on the ground that they comprise a cartel beavily subsidized by their government.

That claim was not very persuasive, and a few days ago President Ronald Reagan turned down Houdaille's request. He was absolutely right to do it, although that hardly ends the argument. While the Houdaille case may be settled, the larger issue is anything but.

Aggrieved American companies are making increasing use of the argument that foreign competition threatens American national security. Dealing with an administration strongly committed to the principle of the free market, they evidently feel that only an appeal to security and military capability will win them a hearing. Perhaps that is true. But the effect is to raise the pitch of the debate and swing it toward an area where compromise is difficult. That tendency is being reinforced by the administration's vigorous efforts to strengthen the Export Administration Act. That brings it into collision both with people in Congress who do not want the government interfering with exports for political purposes, and with West Europeans. To the Europeans, the legislation implies more American attempts to reach across their boundaries through the multinational companies to tamper with their foreign policy, as the administration tried to do last year in the failed campaign to stop the Siberian gas pipeline.

The United States is still, by a substantial margin, the world's largest producer and exporter of high-technology goods, and it still exports twice as many dollars' worth as it imports. But American manufacturers have come under heavy competitive pressure in areas that have been traditionally American, and the sense of uneasiness is pervasive. Concern over lost markets abroad has become emmeshed with concern over the flow of American technology to foreign competitors and, more omi-nously, to the Soviet Union. There is nothing approaching a consensus, in the country or in the administration, on policy for trade in hightechnology equipment. But it is pretty clear that the questions of economic policy and the questions of national security will be answered most effectively in those cases where they can 1908: Art Forgeries Uncovered NEW YORK — An inquiry by leading art collectors shows that for years critics and buyers have been grossly deceived by a well-known dealer who has cooperated with a painter of extraordinary ability to finish uncompleted works of recognized masters and to imitate their individual styles. Homer Martin, A.H. Wyant and George Inness, all dead, are among those whose work has been most suc-

WASHINGTON — President Ronald Reagan's White House staff is divided into three parts: the upstairs part headed by the pragmatic James Baker; the downstairs part headed by the conservative William Clark: and the backstairs part patrolled by their assistants, who tell the press about the differences between upstairs and downstairs. There have been differences among most presidents' advisers ever since Thomas Jeffer-son was accused of relying on an "invisible, inscrutable" group of associates that engaged in "hackstairs influence." So the current rumors of a struggle for the president's mind among the Big Four — Mr. Baker, Mr. Clark, Michael Deaver and Edwin Messe — are not new, just more public.

They are the result of President Reagan's remoteness from the day-to-day formation of policy, of his habit of delegating authority widely, and not to a single chief of staff, as President Dwight Eisenhower did, and of his tendency to avoid getting his principal aides together on a regular basis to listen patiently to their arguments and differences.

The followed the military staff system. He did not spend hours listening to the disputes of his principal aides, but gave Sherman Adams and later General Bedell Smith authority and responsibility for settling differences. When his chief of staff could not settle differences, he insisted on a one-page memorandum defining the problem, no matter how complicated, and then made his decision.

Harry Truman did not believe in the single chief of staff. He had six principal advisers, with whom he met every morning. At the end of the day, he would have a little bourbon and branch-water with one of them in the Oval Office, then would take a bundle of papers up-stairs, put on his green eyeshade and read re-ports until late in the night.

John F. Kennedy followed much the same system with his brother Robert, Larry O'Brien, Kenny O'Donnell and Ted Sorensen at his side, though their assignments were not limited as rigidly as those of the Truman advisers.

Lyndon Johnson did not invite criticism or differences within his staff or cahinet, but bul-lied his advisers into compliance, which belps over the most intricate details of policy.

Analyzing the 'Hitler Diaries'

Mr. Reagan's way is a reflection of his charfew leaks out of the White House in those days, and even if the leaks were true, the president did not hesitate to reverse a decision to demonstrate that they were not.

Richard Nixon ran his staff by stealth. He did his bomework and mastered the details of policy, but he delegated vast powers to Bob Haldeman and John Ehrlichman in an atmosphere of Byzantine secrecy and intrigue. This is perhaps the best recent example of the dangers of a staff loyal to the person of the president rather than to the oath of office.

Jimmy Carter had his troubles between his White House staff and his cabinet, particularly over the conduct of foreign policy. But his White House staff was drawn from a group of Georgia friends who got along with one another comparatively well. He met with the principal members every morning, held a foreign policy meeting often for hours every Friday moroing, invited and listened to disputes, sometimes acter and his personality. He is more interested in presenting policy than forming it. He does not have a controlling chief of staff; he does staff, like Mr. Johnson; and he does not read and work like Mr. Carter. Does it matter? Most observers here would say it does. But there are some advantages. It frees him to speak and perform, which he does better than any president in recent memory, even when he is perdiling nonsense. Also, since he could stop the squabbling and most of the White House leaks by taking the Big Four to the woodshed, it is conceivable that the leaks of his coming plans provide him an opportunity to test public and congressional opinion before acting.

But it matters because one day he takes his advice from upstairs and the next from down-stairs. His speeches are more vivid and unyielding than his acts, which creates a feeling of uncertainty and incoherence at home and abroad and is harmful to the president because there is continuing doubt about whether he is really in command of a steady, communing policy. Accordingly, his proposals are increasingly rejected by the Congress and the allies. And the confusion of his staff is at least partly to blame.

A Suite in Media-Minor: Notes for the Perplexed

By William Safire

In recent weeks, we have heard the Mr. Shultz's image from savior to trumpets of television news - which used to hlare hosannas to the silent national security adviser, William Clark — now suddenly tooting the sourest notes in his direction. The clarinets of the great dailies, and bas-friendly media conductors are presoons of the pundits, followed as al-ways by the violins of the news magazines - all of which once played the hallelujah-he's-not-Haig chorus to George Shultz - are now whispering in perfect harmony that the virtue of impassivity can also be a vice. As a guide to the perplexed, here are program notes to help concert-goers understand the sudden shifts in the media tune. WASHINGTON - Reports reaching the State Department as well as members of the Baha'i faith in the United States reveal new persecution in Iran against the Baha'i, including executions and the barring of tens of thousands of children from attending school.

"It is serious, very serious, be-cause, bit by bit, the Baha'i community is being destroyed," said forms of superstition Firuz Kazemzadeh, a Baha'i of Irato a recent pamphlet. nian descent who is chairman of the Committee on Middle Eastern Studies at Yale University. "Thousands of Baha'i will not be massacred tomorrow, but given time the community will be destroyed in small steps.

The Baha'i are adherents of a relatively little-known religion that has no clergy and whose funda-mental tenets are that religious truth is not absolute, but relative. All religions — including Islam - are believed to be of divine origin.

State Department officials have been concerned by a court ruling two mooths ago in the southern city of Shiraz to execute 22 Baha'i men and women on charges of spying and links to Israel.

Last week three of them were hanged. Nearly 400 Baha'i are believed to be in prison in Iran, and about 4,000 are said to be "internal refugees" and in hiding.

At the time of sentencing, the president of the Revolutionary Court of Shiraz warned the 300,000 to 400,000 members of the faith in Iran that "the day will soon come" when Iran would deal with the group "as it has dealt with other hypocrites who have religious and satanic gatherings." The remark and other recent comments have stirred unease within the State Department about the fate of the Baha'i in Iran, who have been denied recognition under the Islamic constitution.

Coinciding with the latest reports of executions - about 150 Baha'i men and women have so far been hung or shot to death by the Iranian government — are indica-tions of severe repression against the Baha'i, including a ban on 25,000 to 30,000 Baha'i children from attending school. This repre-sents about half the number of Baha'i schoolchildren.

Pentagon Health Chief Opposed Lie Detector Tests Within Agency

By George C. Wilson Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — The Pentagon's health director warned that the polygraph "misclassifies innocent people as liars" several months before President Ronald Reagan ardered wider use of lie detector tests to try to stop security leaks within the government, John F. Beary 3d, a medical doctor who is acting assistant secretary of defense for health affairs, told Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger and other Pentagon officials in a memo that polygraph tests often can be unisleading in determining whether people are telling the truth.

Dr. Beary's memo came amid a flap last winter over a draft Pentagon directive authorizing wider use of lie detector tests in investigations of information leaks. That Pentagon directive was a prelude to Mr. Reagan's decision last month to make greater use of polygraph tests in all government agencies.

Henry E. Catto Jr., assistant secretary of defense for public affairs, said Tuesday that he had received a copy of Dr. Beary's memo and sup-plemented it with a letter of his own to Mr. Weinberger warning that wide use of polygraphs within the Pentagon could be "a public re-An estimated 8,000 Baha'i have fled Iran in recent years, but exit

Dr. Beary, after ordering a review of studies of the polygraph, made the following points to Mr. Weinberger in his memo:

 "Nn machine can detect a lie.
 The machine can only detect stress; however, the stress may result from several emotional causes other than guilt, such as fear, surprise or anger.

ment that the theory is flawed, there are accuracy problems. We have only been able to locate two scientifically account. scientifically ecceptable studies so far. ... In one the polygraph accuracy is 62 percent. In the other the accuracy is 72 percent.

"The polygraph misclassifies innocent people as liars. In one study, 49 percent of truthful subjects were scored as deceptive. Io another study, 55 percent of the innocent were misclassified." Dr. Beary closed his memo to

Mr. Weinberger by stating: "I regret I have oo alternatives to propose to solve the serious problem of security leaks, but I feel it is important for you to be informed of the serious scientific concerns about the theory of and the accuracy of the polygraph technique."

An aide to Dr. Beary confirmed the authenticity of the memo.

The Beary memo was dated Dec 16, 1982, when it was a classified It was declassified

Mr. Cattn said Tuesday that Mr. Weinberger "hasn't focused on" the polygraph issue yet, and that the Pentagon's general counsel, William Howard Tast 4th, was currently overseeing the matter.

President Reagan's directive went beyond the one in force at the Pentagon by ordering departments: to draft regulations that would enable them to require polygraph tests and punish employees who refused to submit to them.

Mr. Taft, when asked his view of lie detector tests, said of the polygraph: "If you use it with its limitations in mind, you can get some benefit from it. It can clear peo-ple," he said, and could indicate: people behaving badly that you

BONN - Another West German has died during questioning by East German border officials, offi-cials said Wednesday. It was the third reported death of a West German in East Germany in less than three weeks.

A spokesman for Bonn's Minis-try for Inter-German Relations said in a statement that East German authorities had reported that Heinz Moldenhauer. 68, had a heart attack on Tuesday, while being rebuked by a customs official at a border checkpoint northeast of Frankfurt over the amount of currency he was carrying. The death was viewed as likely to contribute to a dispute within West Germany's governing coali-tion over relations between the two countries. The feud began after the death on April 10 of Rudolf Burkert, who also suffered a heart attack while being questioned by East German officials.

On Sunday, ADN, the East German news agency, said a West Ger-man woman had died of a heart attack while her son was driving her on a transit route to West Berlin.

The Ministry for Inter-German Relations statement said the dispute involving Mr. Moldenhauer concerned the amount of currency be was bringing back from a day's outing into East Germany.

Andropov Asks Space Arms Ban

Tells American Group Moment Is Crucial

By Dusko Doder MOSCOW - Yuri V. Andropov, the Soviet leader, called Wednesday for an international agreement to ban the use of space weapons. saying "now a crucial moment is really coming" to halt plans for transferring the arms race into

The Soviet leader's remarks, reported by Tass, were contained in his reply to a telegram he received from a group of prominent Ameri-cans calling for a ban on space-

"Either the interested states willsit down at the negotiating table; without delay to begin drawing up., a treaty prohibiting the deploy-quent in space of weapons of any; kind or the arms race will go over also into space," Mr. Andropov Tass said the telegram included signatures of the Nobel Prize laureates I.L Rabi and Hans Bethe; Admiral Noel Gayler, former head of the National Defense Agency: Christopher Craft, former director. of the Johnson Space Center, Richard Garvin of the Watson Research Center; former Vice Admiral John .. Lee; and such prominent scientific figures as Wolfgang Panofsky. George Rathjens, Carl Sagan and Herbert York.

Tass said the authors of the telegram appealed to Mr. Andropov and to President Ronald Reagan "to come to terms" on a pact banning the deployment of any kind of weapons in onter space as well as prohibiting "the damaging or de-struction of the satellites of any quoted as saying, would be "in the interest of the entire mankind."

The authors were also quoted as saying that the United States was preparing tests of an advanced and-satellite system and "that once such systems of weapons appear in" the arsenals of countries, it would be very difficult to phase them

Although Mr. Andropov in his reply underscored Soviet readiness to negotiate a ban on space weapons, his warning that time was running out appeared designed to make it clear that the Soviet Union . intended to match new U.S. space weapons systems. ::

The Soviet leader said that a... 1981 Kremlin proposal for a treaty banning militarization of outer space was blocked by the Reagan... administration.

Referring to Mr. Reagan's recent . speech calling for futuristic antimissile systems, Mr. Andropov said that "recent developments space-based military technology" was being assigned "an even greatfighting measures.

"I would like to hope that the? scientists and public figures of the a whole world will also make a contribution of their own to making certain that space will forever remain free of any weapons at all,"

The tone of Mr. Andropov's reply, also distributed by Tass, was, w key and appeared designed to-1 bolster opposition to Mr. Reagan's plan to deploy an anti-missile defense system in outer space.

The Russians have previously denounced the Reagan plan as violating the spirit of a 1967 treaty onspace exploration.

Mr. Andropov has said the pland violated Soviet-U.S. understandings such as the anti-ballistic missile treaty and the treaty limiting strategic offensive weapons.

Mr. Andropov has described Mr. Reagan's defensive strategic concept as a ruse to deceive a gullible public. In fact, Mr. Andropov said, Mr. Reagan's proposal was de-signed to give the United States a first strike" capability while ren-dering the Soviet Union "unable to: deal a retaliatory strike.

The finding of a greatly increased risk of autoimmune disease among those who are strongly left-handed grew out of a chance observation by Dr. Geschwind a neurologist at Harvard Medical School and Beth Israel Hospital in Boston. At a meeting of dyslexia researchers, he noticed that when people described their family histories, there appeared to be a disproportionate number of patients with autoimmune diseases among those with dyslexia and their families.

But Dr. Geschwind is quick to note that his finding was not merely serendipitous. Quoting the 19thcentury scientist Louis Pasieur, he says: "In the fields of observation, chance favors the prepared mind."

Dr. Geschwind's mind was prepared to look at the full spectrum of autoimmune disorders among left-handed people and among dys-lexics on the theory that a genetic predisposition to a condition may be expressed differently in differ-

Instead of studying the incidence of left-handedness among dyslexics, as most previous researchers had done, Dr. Geschwind decided to study left-handed people to determine what problems existed among them and their families. With the help of Peter Behan, a neurologist at the University of Glasgow, he devised a questionnaire that would select those people who were most strongly lefthanded and compared them with strongly right-handed people.

On average, Dr. Geschwind beheves that about 70 percent of the population has standard brain dominance, with the left side of the brain controlling language and handedness, making most of those individuals right-handed. The remaining 30 percent of people have more symmetrical brain dominance, and of these about a third are strongly left-handed.

In the first study, involving 253 left-handers (gleaned from patrons of a shop for left-handers in London) and an equal oumber of right-handers, the left-handed group was found to have 12 times more learning disabilities and nearly three times more autoimmune diseases. Their relatives also had higher rates of these problems.

In the second study, the subjects were gathered from among the general population of Glasgow. Here too, the incidence of autoimmune disease was 21/2 times higher among the left-handers. A third study compared the frequency of lefthandedness among patients with migraine headaches or immune dis-headache patients and those with myasthenia gravis, an autoimmune disease. Dr. Geschwind believes

In studies not yet published, researchers found "a distinct increase childhood allergies among strongly lest-handed people. Other researchers have reported a high rate of allergies among stutter-ers, an increased frequency of food allergy among hyperactive chil-dren, and a high rate of immune disorders among children with au-"In all these conditions there is an elevated rate of left-handedness." Dr. Geschwind reported to a conference this month, and that suggests the possibility of a common origin. The origin he and Behan propose involves a region of the hrain called the planum temporale, an area involved in speech. Scientists had long thought both sides of the brain were of equal size. Then in 1968, Dr. Geschwind and Dr. Walter Levisky discovered a difference that was visible even to the naked eye: in most brains, the planum temporale was much larger in the left hemisphere than in the right. This was in accord with previous knowledge that the left hemisphere controlled language.

Dr. Geschwind said that in hrains, the planum temporale is larger on the left 65 percent of the time; in 24 percent the two sides are equal, and in 11 percent the planum is larger on the right.

opment of the planum temporale on the right side of the brain. Left-handedness, that some cases of migraine may abilities, autism, and stuttering are result from an immunological disall found more frequently among hoys than girls. Dr. Geschwind noted. This suggests that a sex-related factor is involved. According to the scientist, animal studies have shown an effect of testosterone on other hrain regions. Dr. Geschwind hypothesizes that testosterone may also be the determining factor in delaying growth of the left planum. Testosterone is produced in large quantities by the male fetus, but the female fetus is exposed to only small amounts of this hormone,

"Testosterone affects the development of the structure of the imnune system." Dr. Geschwind said. One effect it may have is on the thymus gland, which helps to distinguish self from foreign. Furthermore, a gene that favors the development of dyslexia has been shown to be located on the same chromosome that contains a gene important to immune function, and it has also been suggested that this same gene is essential for the formation of the testes.

One possible glitch in the testosterooe theory stems from the fact that autoimmune diseases are far more commoo in women. But Dr. Geschwind cites evidence that in adult life testosterone protects against immune derangements, so that even if men are more susceptible to such disorders, their susceptihility is not expressed until late in life, when testesterone levels de-

Soviet Tale of Survival in Antarctica

By Theodore Shabad New York Times Service

NEW YORK — The Soviet Union, ending a yearlong silence, has revealed bow 20 scientists and technicians at a research station in the Antarctic survived 227 days in the frigid polar winter after a fire had destroyed their life-sustaining diesel power plant. The near-tragedy, in which the powerhouse engineer was killed in a vain attempt to save the diesel units, was disclosed in interviews published in the Soviet press while the survivors were recovering from their ordeal on their way home aboard an Antarctic expedition ship, the passenger liner Bashkiriya. They reached the Black Sea port of Odessa on March 13.

The incident occurred at the Vostok station, halfway between the coast and the U.S. outpost at the South Pole. It is one of seven Soviet stations in Antarctica, and the place with the lowest recorded temperature on the earth, 127 de-grees below zero Fahrenheit (minus 8 Centigrade), in August 1960. Since the station was founded in 1957, the Soviet crews have been joined in various years by scientists from the United States, Australia, France, East Germany and Czechoslovakia. No foreigners were at Vostok during the 1982 winter season. The following details could be pieced together from the published On April 12, at 4 A.M., Sergei Kuznetsov, a mechanic, was awakened in his quarters by the smell of smoke. Through the window, in the gray dawn, he saw a black plume curling from the powerhouse. The temperature outside was 75 below zero, with a strong wind.

The scientists, roused from sleep, were unable to control the unusually smoky blaze, and they lost not only the station's three main diesel units, but also all the standby gencrators, which had been placed in the powernouse. Fire extinguishers did not function in the numbing temperature and no smoke masks were at hand. The blaze was apparently an electrical fire that had been set off by a snort circuit when the insulation of wires cracked in

For a while, the flames seemed to threaten the fuel stores, but these were saved by a change in wind direction. It was all over in 15 number. The only fatality was Alexei Karpenko, an engineer who had entered the burning structure by smoke and heat.

It was the onset of the winter night in the Antarctic, where seasons are the reverse of those in the Northern Hemisphere. The last regular supply plane, a skiepling as a skiepling of the Soviet Antarctic headquarters on the Soviet Antarctic headquarters on the Coast, in late February. But it had to return in March on an emergency airlift, risky this late in the season, to evacuate a Vostok physicist who had been felled by acute seasons to the same and the state of the same and failed to raise Vostok in any of the four regular daily sessions, and was puzzled and worried. It was only late on April 12 that Vostok Because of the danger of fire from the precarious heaters, a watch had to be kept around the clock. Despite the adverse conditions, the crew managed to continue some meteorological observations and other scientific research. The site of Vostok was picked by the risky this late in the season, to evacuate a Vostok physicist who had been felled by acute mountain sickness in the rarified air of the station, which is on an ice plateau at 11.440 feet.

The next day, Astakhov radioed details. The news was passed on to details the Arctic and Antarctic Institute in Leningrad, the expedition sponsible distratch of a station, which is on an ice plateau at 11.440 feet. at 11,440 feet.

With power, hear and lights our and the temperature dropping rapidly in the huildings, prompt action was needed. The Vostok crew, led by Pyotr G. Astakhov, the station chief, moved perishable goods and provisions into a hut that was supplied with a small kcrosene heater, and the 20 men doubled up on bunks in three small rooms.

At Vostok, power was essential to the makeshift power supply. The ice-coring project advanced 270 feet.

The ordeal finally ended when the annual tractor-sledge train from Mirny arrived Nov. 23 with a spare diesel generator, as well as fuel, supplies and provisions. A new power plant was promptly put into operation, and this time the standhy units were carefully stored some distance away. A bilter lesson had been learned. bunks in three small rooms.

WALL STREET WATCH

By EDWARD ROHRBACH

Outperforming the Bull Market Means Making Very Few Errors

With stock prices charging through 1,200 on the Dow average — and up more than 50 percent since the bull market began its stampede wall Street last August — all a successful investor has had to be is one of the herd.

For those who have done better, it's hard to be bumble. For those who haven't, "it's a gut-wrenching experience to be out of phase with the market," observed Morgan Stanley's Barton M. Biggs, writing to clients in the firm's weekly Perspectives.

His point is that "good investors" make mistakes, but not consistently, and they perform well over five-year periods.

"Hot stock solo operators who are really just traders and speculators smally do crash and burn." he said. "Preposterous egos, unsound practices and high turnover make such a fate almost inevitable for these interactions. The only question is when."

By contrast, good investors are "long-lived candles ... obsessed with markets and prices. Pre-

Investing is not work or a job but fan to those who do it well, Mr. Biggs said. The smartest buying and selling is done when someone s not pressed for time and unassailed by telephones, meetings and

"The good investor's deadly enemies are ignorance, greed, fear and Another Wall Street trail boss, Francis H.M. Kelly, chairman of Dean Witter's investment policy committee, also has been waxing philosophical around the campfire: "In times like these, when investors are sulfused with confidence in their recent infallibility, when the enthusiastic leap blindly into the swollen stream of new issues, and when there seems to be no obstacle to mass prosperity through equity risk bearing, big mistakes are made."

Few Opportunities Left

The number of genuinely attractive investment opportunities on Wall Street are dwindling to a precious few, he warned in a special report for the firm, at just the time when "many are surrendering their judgment to he emotions of the moment."

The cardinal rules of successful investing, he said, are "vigilance, fear of crowds, hardheadedness and patience." But in runaway markets such is the present, "the qualities brought forth are opportunism, mobility, exploitation and superficiality. That is, these times favor those who can ide herd on the crowd and play into its momentum.

"It will take much greater selectivity and preparation in the coming ear to maintain a record of successful performance, and, in the process, he successful investor will quickly be leached from the mass of specula-

Investing on Wall Street shares many elements with poker. Mr. Kelly observed, with probability and group psychology - bluffing in the eard ame -- playing big roles.

"Of course," he said. "one can reduce equity investing to an exercise of maided judgment about random events, then choose to live in a pressure which programs aroust random events, then choose to live in a pressure socker of instant gratification or failure; which is to say, there is very inle that separates the sloppy plunger from the sloppy gambler.

"Unlike gambling, at which nobody stays lucky, the object of sane neesting is to stay true to well-proven investing principles, to avoid frowd mania as the pretext for tomorrow's purchase, to eschew gluttony in the pursuit of early riches - in sbort, to ocutralize the dangerous espects of crowd psychology while elevating the importance of pure inprination. We will always have our losers, but that is their choice, not a rerdict that 'Many must lose, that a few may win.'

'That's the difference'

It's a fact that Standard Chartered Bank has 1900 branches in over 60 countries.

And it's common experience that doing international business through Standard Chartered can be a lot more efficient - and profitable - as a result.

Because we're dealing with our own branches, we can often solve in hours a problem that would take a correspondent network days to unravel.

Because our branches are linked by the latest computer technology, working through our own private telecommunications network, we can speed the transmission of funds and the processing of documents dramatically. (It used to be an important advantage. Today, it's a crucial one.)

And because we can offer you a complete range of services worldwide (from 24-hour-aday foreign exchange dealing in 55 currencies through 18 dealing locations, to trade and project finance and merchant banking services) you'll almost certainly discover that we can make your international business life a lot simpler - as well as more efficient.

We have, in short, something different to offer you. And discovering the difference could be the best business decision you'll make this year.

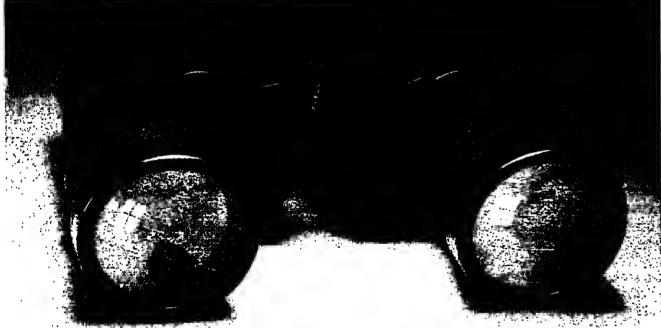

Direct banking, worldwide

By 8 3-2 vote, the commission accepted Tuesday the proposal that would resolve a 1980 commission complaint accusing GM of failing to disclose alleged problems or defects in several recent model year cars. As now outlined, GM would conduct a multimillion-dollar advertising the company, and we take it as a campaign to inform customers of the nationwide program under which the company would be required to adhere to the ruling of a volunteer arbitrator. #### Japan's economy remains weak, Production marks time, Domestic demand stays stagnant

1. Falling oil prices In mid-March, OPEC reduced its crude oil prices by $5 per barrel. It is believed that lower oil prices will have a salutary effect on international balance of payments and on prices in Japeo and other oil-consuming countries, eventually contributing to the betterment of the world economy as a whole. However, in the short-term, it is feared that the OPEC courtries might withdraw their overseas investments to make up for the deterioration in their current account balances, and that the accumulated debts of some developing countries will become more serious, causing iotensified concern over international financial insecurity.

With such uncertainties haveing over the future, one good sign that is emerging for the world economy is an upturn in the U.S. economy. Symptomatic of this are the rebound in personal consumption and the surge in housing construction. The world is watching to see whether these signs, together with the trend of interest rates and fiscal deficits, will lead to substantial recovery of the U.S.

2. Japanese production

Both mining and manufacturing production and shipments have repeatedly advanced and receded since last autumn. Although the production and shipment indices as a whole do not show definite signs of an uptura, there is a marked disparity between the recovery of the materials industry and that of the processing iodustry. Whereas production and shipment in the materials industry trended down-ward throughout 1982, in the processing industry they hit the processing industry they fill the bottom last spring and almost recovered to the previous year's level by the end of 1982. The inventories of finished goods of both the processing and materials industries creasing in the first half and decreasing in the second half. But the fluctuations in the former industry were some-what violent, whereas those of the latter were mild. This was due to the fact that production and shipment in the processing industry continued to increase steadily until autumn 1981, reflecting strong exports, but later the industry was forced to trim an unexpected buildup of inventory as exports slowed down sharply. On the other hand, the inventory of the materials industry was kept low for a long time because its recession continued far longer than that of the processing industry.

The question is whether exports will recover. Seasonally adjusted exports are falling month to month in volume, dropping 4.7 per cent in November and 4.8 per cent in December. After scoring an increase in the September-November period, export letters of credit received tin dollars; decreased 1.2 per ceol in December and 4.8 per cent in January. In the U.S. the pace of recovery is still slow, and in Europe protectionism is gain-ing strength with shrinking demand and high unemployment. Nothing is seen in the offing that might contribute to the improvement of Japan's export

3. Domestic demand stagnant

The all-important domestic demand seems to be stalling. too. Personal consumption expenditure, which propped up the economy in the first half of last year, is sluggish. The household budget survey shows that consumption spending has been stagnant after hitting a peak last spring (see Graph). Large-scale retailers' sales show only a very mild growth on the average, with violent fluctuations from month lo month. The biggest cause is the lack of increase in personal income. Despite the stabilization in prices, reat payroll income has teveled off after last spring's marked increase, and disposable income after taxes and social security premiums is on the decrease. It is estimated that income from wages and salaries in December did not increase because the gain in the year-end bonus was minimal tup 3.2 per cent over households are trying to maintain their consumption level by cutting their savings rate, it may be futile to hope for any substantial boost in personal consumption demand.

1981, according to a Labor

Ministry survey). Although

Housing investment, appears low-keyed, reflecting stagnant personal income and a rise in household expenses. The number of housing starts, which had exceeded the previous year's level since last July and registered a double-digit increase in October and November over previous months managed to post a scant gain of 2.t per cent in December. This was due to the fact that government-financed housing, which had been advancing at a rate of more than 40 per cent every month until last November. lost steam in December, registering an increase of only 8.4 per November, the high level of housing construction was sustained by the rush to take advantage of lower interest rates before the revision of the Housing Loan Corporation's loan terms. Cause for apprehension is seen in the trend of plant and equipment investment. Seasonally adjusted shipments of capital goods excluding transport machinery, after dipping sharply in October to 10.2 per cent below the preceding month, recorded increases of 4.5 per cent in November and 6.2 per ceot in December. Machinery orders received iprivate demand excluding electric power plants and ships, a leading indicator, after seasonal adjustment recorded a quarterty decrease of 3.6 per cent in the July-September quarter and a monthly drop of tā.5 per cent in October, but rebounded slightly in November to an increase of 5.7 per cent over October. However, they dipped 3.9 per cent in Decem-December average 8.8 per cent below the preceding quarter.

Although a tax cut will be enforced in fiscal 1983 for capital investments by medium and small enterprises, the proposed plan is not big enough to stimulate the investment zeal of medium and small businesses that are hard hit by

In recent months, the yen's rate to the dollar has remained more or less in the Y 230-240 range. Because of the current stability in the exchange rate and the increased national bond issues. long-term interest rates have not dropped further after they declined 0.3 per cent in December and 0.2 per cent in January this year. Judging funds in the private sector and the sluggish domestic business situation, a lowering of rates at the earliest possible date is desirable. THE CHANGING ANATOMY OF BRITAIN

By Anthony Sampson.

476 pp. $17.95.

Random House, 201 East 50th St., New York, N.Y. 10022.

Reviewed by Leonard Downie Jr.

TWENTY years ago, when Anthony Samp-soo's original "Anatomy of Britain" be-came the authoritative guide to that nation's postwar power structure and post-imperial struggle to adapt to a changed world role, it was full of the hopes of British leaders for reform and modernization of the country's aged institutions, obsolescent economy and divisive class system.

Now, just months before an important na-tional election in Britain, Sampson's fourth and most extensively rewritten "Anatomy" is filled with the "failure" of those "bold promises of change and reform." Britain's leaders "had realously set about trying to reform al-most every area of administration to make Britain more efficient and equitable," son writes. "Yet nearly all of these bold en-deavors had ended in disillusion, if not fiasco."

In "The Changing Anatomy of Britain," Sampson maintains his tradition of presenting encyclopedic analyses of Britain's institutions and thumbnail sketches of the people who run

Sampson paints a gloomy picture. Britain's entrenched, elitist government bureacracy has remained "immobile" and resistant to change. Its education system has perpetuated class divisions despite a chaotic reorganization. Its legal system has become increasing irrevelant to the real problems and concerns of citizens. Its unwieldy large industries have failed to modernize and rationalize themselves sufficiently to compete in the new world of high technology. Its internationally preoccupied financiers have remained aloof from their own nation's severe economic problems. Its military has commanded too large a share of resources in a climate of imperial nostalgia aggravated by the Falkland Islands adventure. Its political parties have become much more polarized — a departure from their long postwar period of cooperation — and are now split sharply over whether Britain should return to largely unfettered capitalism or increase government control of the economy through welfare state

Over and over again, Sampson warns Brit-ain's leaders, voters and friends that they are not facing up to the magnitude of these problems. "Throughout these 20 years the more serions politicians have realized the unique dangers of a nation in the aftermath of empire," he writes. "They knew the parallels with other post-imperial nations from Egypt to Spain, though they have kept their real fears private."

Sampson, who opposed Britain's prosecu-tion of the Falklands war, fearing it could end in disaster, now acknowledges the efficiency with which victory was won. But he remains unconvinced of claims that it demonstrated a turning point for postwar Britain, finding few signs of similar purposefulness in tackling th country's political, economic and social prob lems. "The sense of purpose which Britain had shown in the Falklands expedition had no las: ing value," he argues, "unless it could be trans ferred to the more critical industrial and social challenges at home."

Similarly, while recognizing that "Britan has some advantages which others envy above all a tradition of political stability which look more precious to countries afflicted by terror ism" and "ancient institutions which in the past have survived and adapted to new chall enges and threats," Sampson warns that these same institutions now pose possibly insur-mountable obstacles to needed change.

He surprisingly admits to some admiration for Conservative Prime Minister Margage Thatcher's determination to force them it drange, despite his strong aversion to her refusal to spend government money to ameliorate the pain, including a 14 percent un employment rate, caused by her survival-of the-fittest economic policies.

But as Britain approaches an election that could give Thetcher five more years to pursue her particular crusade for change, Sampson makes clear he sees her as a throwback to an earlier era that can never really be relived. Any cure to the British post-industrial malaise . . . will not be achieved by trying to recupture the self-confidence and arrogance of imperial Britain," he argues, "which was based on a malitary power and industrial supremacy which can never return."

Instead, Sampson betrays his behind-the-scenes role in the new Social Democratic Party by advocating its centrist alternatives to Brit-ain's polarized major parties, class conflicts, labor-management conflicts and unchanging institutions. He fails to ask himself whether his concluding characteristically Social Demo-cratic prescription for Britain's future does not sound like those unfulfilled aspirations of 20 years ago: "It will depend on new opportunities, new kinds of people outside the old classes, who are aware of new opportunities, innovations and new markets abroad."

If this sounds like the new-everything prononncements of several Democratic presiden-tial candidates, if Margaret Thatcher sounds much like Ronald Reagan, and if American voters appear likely to face in the presidential election of 1984 some of the same choices (minus a radically socialist major party on the left) that the British will have when Thatcher calls a national election sometime within the next 10 months, it makes Sampson's point. His new anatomy of Britain "has an epic theme which is more universal," as similar "problems of retreat and admistment now also face other nations including the United States,"

.This adds to the importance of a book that comes closer than any other to a clear-headed analysis of what can no longer be called only the Boush disease." Sampson offers object lessons for readers on the American side of the truth for a lot of American students. They are being informed by the colleges and universities they applied to whether they have been talking to my uncle, who is a law-accepted or rejected. For high yer, I discovered that you were livschool students it is a particularly traumatic experience, because, for many teen agers, it's the first time schools in the nation far superior that anyone has turned them down to yours, who only charge half as for anything. How do you deal with rejection when you get a letter that says you can't come to a school you had your heart sel on? One way is to pretending you did not receive his or her letter. It could go like this:

It is with deep regret that I ask you to withdraw my application to your school. After careful consideration and investigation I have discovered that your institution does not provide the educational experience I am lonking for.

I bave discovered that your exorbitant tintion fees have no correla-Uon with the quality of your facul-ty, or the living facilities that you are providing for your students.

I was shocked to discover, in a recent visit to your campus, how many of your buildings are rundown and covered with ivy. Your athletic facilities are second-rate and your student activity programs leave much to be desired. I also can't see spending what should be the four happiest years of my life at a school that does not have adequate parking space for those of us whose parents are making such a great financial sacrifice to see that we get the best education that money can buy.

In withdrawing my application I am not personally blaming you for not maintaining a first-class university plant.

Your job is to provide the school with bodies, and fill the freshman class. In order to huld on to your position (the college job market being what it is), you can't level with student prospects as to what the catalog says about the institution, and what the facts really are.

But in selecting a school, I have to put my own self-interest before your interest, which is finding outstanding applicants to raise the standards of your university.

In my nriginal letter to you I ex-> much in tuition. I could go on with many other reasons why I have lost interest in attending your university, but it would serve no useful purpose for cither of us.

> I hope you don't take my rejection personally. We high school graduates must make this decision on the basis of the number of excellent institutions available to us at this time. The fact that you failed in recruiting me should not be considered as a black mark against your school.

> I wish it were in my power to go to every school that wanted me. But I can only choose one, and un-fortunately the criteria my parents and I have set up for my education have forced me to eliminate your institution.

I am certain you will find other students who are less demanding than we are when it comes to investing their money and time. They may even have better academic high school records and higher SAT scores than I have. I hope for your sake that a majority of them will find what they are looking for in a higher education, because this country needs every college graduate it can get.

I appreciate that you would want me to be a part of your student body. I know you bad high hopes for the school when you received my application, but your failure to recruit me does not mean the end of the world for your admissions office. The toughest jub of being a high school graduate is to say no to a university who had its heart set on a student's going there.

If it will make you feel any better, you were originally my sixth choice, which isn't bad considering all the schools I had to pick from in the country.

A Prize Season for Alice Walker

Top Awards Come to Writer After a Decade of Critical Acclaim

By Herbert Mitgang New York Times Se AN FRANCISCO - Etched in Alice Walker's memory is that summer day in 1966 in Greenwood, Mississippi, when she was a civil-rights worker. A man came up to her in the motel where she was staying — it hadn't been cleared as a safe place for blacks, and particularly for a black woman talking there with a white lawyer from New York and warned her:
"Don't let the sun go down on you in this here town."

Recalling the incident now, she laughed, not so much at the fact that her life had been threatened - she took the hint and was escorted out of town by civilrights colleagues before sundown
— but by the man's language.

"Such a cliché," she said the nther day, talking from her home in San Francisco, where she has lived down the street from St. Mary's Cathedral, in the neigh-borhood called Japantown, for the last five years.

For a born storyteller, the warning sounded like a line worth filing away, perhaps one that would turn up eventually as dialogue in a poem, short story, essay or novel written by, well, Alice Walker.

Walker, originally from Eatonton, Georgia, last week became the first black woman to win the Pulitzer Prize in fiction for her novel "The Colnr Purple." A few days earlier she had won the American Book Award in the hardcover category for the same navel, while Eudora Welty, of Jackson, Mississippi, already heavy with honnrs, had won in the paperback category for her "Collected Stories," making it a sweep in fiction fur their mutual pblisher, Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, and the Deep South.

Though she isn't a household name on the popularity charts, "Color Purple" was a modest best-seller, and the novel is expected to achieve a second wind because of the awards.

Walker, who is 39 years nld, has been acclaimed critically for a decade. She is the author of a solid body of work: two previous letters. oovels, "The Third Life of "The

"Willie Lee was my father's name," she said. "That was what my mother said at his funeral." The title poem also helped to explain her roots as a writer: "My parents were both storytellers. They always spoke with metaphorical richness."

In "The Color Purple," Walker reached back into the era of her family's past more than of ber own. The novel covers the period between the World Wars, telling the story of two sisters, one a missionary in Africa, the other a child-wife living in the South. They sustain each nther, and lves, through a series of

"The novel ends about the time

I was born," she said. "It's more like my grandparents' time in Georgia. Eatonton is still very much the same small farming town as when I grew up and went to public school there. At first, the characters in the novel didn't want to come to life for me in San Francisco, so I went up to a little town in northern California, Boonville, and just sat there for a

"That's how I decided that the letter form would work best nther. It was also a way of solving a technical problem of having characters in Georgia and Africa. They never actually get the let-ters, but that's beside the point. By writing, they grew closer. I suppose what I was saying is this: Although we don't get each other's messages, we can still have faith in each other."

Hiram Haydn, an editor at Harcourt, Brace, accepted the book of po-ems in 1965, after Walker had graduated from Sarah Lawrence.
"Then I went to work for the New York City Welfare Department to support my writing," she said, "living on the Lower East Side between Avenue A and Avenue B in a building that had no front door. I'm not at all nostalgic for the place. I remained with Welfare Department for four months, writing at night, but I couldn't stand it.

"In the summer of 1966, I went to Mississippi, to be in the heart of the civil-rights movement, helping people who had been thrown off the farms or taken off the welfare rolls for registering to vote. While working there, I met the civil-rights lawyer I later mar-ried — we became an interracial couple. In New York, I worked as an editor at Ms. magazine and he worked for the NAACP Legal Defense Fund. We're now divorced and share custody of our daughter."

After living in Brooklyn, she decided that the buildings in the city were too tall for her. "I'm realized I was a country person women often write letters to each I'm just not used to small spaces." she said. "so I moved to San Francisco. I also have a little cabin in Mendocino, where I've just planted a bundred trees." Walker is now completing a book of essays, "In Search of Our Mothers' Gardens," that is scheduled for next fall.
